

Member feedback: PINK SARIS

Thirty three people voted. The breakdown and comments are listed below

'EXCELLENT': 3 votes

- A nice surprise should be seen by many!
- Even knowing what we do about the conditions of women it is very sobering to think of the opportunities I've had compared to these women. Heaven help Afghanistan when the Taliban return.

'VERY GOOD': 11 votes

- A very salutary lesson on how lucky we are to live in U.K. A fascinating film – but maybe played to the camera a little.
- Rather long.

'GOOD': 13 votes

- Enjoyed very much.
- Worthy of being shown on TV to reach a greater audience. Well made but the subject appeared to show off a bit.
- The film revealed how poverty, lack of education, ridiculous traditions and an unwillingness to adopt the principles of equality and respect make women second-class citizens. Quite effective but probably a little too long given that it made its point almost immediately.
- Interesting – bit too long.
- Interesting and shocking.
- A very revealing documentary, however Sampat Pal seemed to enjoy the camera which detracted from the impact of subject. It might have benefited by having comment from the actual ladies in pink.
- A decent portrayal of a fascinating character.
- An Indian Trisha?

'SATISFACTORY': 6 votes

- Confusing at times and depressing.

'POOR': 0 votes