'Excellent': 5 votes

- Excellent presentation of some ideas filtering down to us; “the middle ‘intelligentsia’”, from astrophysicists & their developing ideas from discoveries over the past fifty years.
- Stunning and poignant.
- An interesting and clever meshing of ideas. Thought-provoking and visually stunning. Makes up for the last one!
- Yes! Chillingly beautiful but comforting. Especially the last scenes – the women see the calcium in the galaxy!

'Very Good': 7 votes

- Very interesting. Greta photography coupled with excellent shot selection. Good integration of the human stories.
- A lot of discussion – heavy
- Beautiful to watch in parts and fascinating because of the way unexpected connections were made. Not ‘excellent’ as some sequences were too long, making the film as a whole rather longer than it needed to be.
- Excellent cinematography, needed to be seen in a cinema but ultimately a little too pretty on the eye for the horrors of the past.
- Well-constructed, poetic, amazing photography.
- Thought-provoking; Sad

- Stunning images from the telescopes and interesting account of the Mothers’ continuing quest for the Disappeared. However, I thought, at times, the Director struggled to tie the two halves of the documentary together.
- A beautifully filmed & poetic documentary. However, quite difficult to watch the unrelenting search for bodies.

'Satisfactory': 3 votes

- Beautifully filmed but a bit pretentious and disengaging. I do think, however, that bastard Jack Straw should be made to watch it.
- Interesting in some parts but dull in others.

- Beautiful to look at but I think a 90 minute documentary needs to be more than just pretty. It needs to be informative and educational and it took a long time to say very little – I felt I learnt nothing new.

Based on the above, the film had an overall score of 3.82.
