'Excellent': 7 votes

- A well-made, handsome film! Lovely to look at England and a bit of Scotland. Much 'food for thought'
- Brill
- Excellent documentary and hopefully the Right To Roam movement win their case for us to be like Scotland.
- I wish everybody could see this film.
- Political and time for a change – but not the House of Lords
- Thought provoking – comparison to Slave abolition was so right.
- Interesting and informative. Makes you think.

'Very Good': 8 votes

- Three things to take from this film: 1. We all need to reconnect with nature; 2. Rearing millions of non-native birds each year, just to fill them with lead, is not responsible management of the countryside. 3. Some landowners could do with leaving their estates occasionally and engaging with real people.
- Complex
- Beautiful film
- A reminder that the good things of life are too often reserved for the few. How do they get away with it? Also, a reminder of the magic of nature and the wonder of music.
- Lovely scenery. Wish more people would just get out and walk.
- Thought provoking.
- When you're so accustomed to privilege, equality feels like oppression. Worth remembering Scotland also has very few leasehold properties.
- Very interesting

- Very soporific. Not sure it went anywhere. Characters who were too entrenched to meet anywhere. Arguments over simplified.

1 Comment without a rating: Could have been said in half the time. Don't agree with the right to roam, plenty of land already available to walk over.
